The Department of English and Modern Languages offers courses intended to help students write clearly and effectively and to read literature with critical appreciation and provides the opportunity for students to develop their communication skills in another language in order to gain linguistic, cultural, and literary understanding and to interact meaningfully with people from other cultures.

A major in English prepares students to enter such careers as education, law, business, Christian ministry, writing, editing, research, library science, public relations, travel, civil service, and administration. The major also prepares for graduate-level studies in English. Creative writers will find publishing and editing opportunities in Parnassus, an on-campus literary magazine published each Spring semester, and in Relief, an international literary journal published each summer. The January interterm offers a travel course to London, England, that combines the study of British literature with visits to important literary and historical sites throughout the United Kingdom. The major in English is offered with a concentration in either Creative Writing or Literature, or in both if there are no overlaps except for ENG 212, ENG 493, and one foundational core survey course.

A major in Spanish prepares students for the future, whether that means sharing their faith, conversing with a neighbor whose first language is not English, or performing a job in the professional realm. In addition to offering foreign language courses to meet the two-year language requirement for the Bachelor of Arts degree, the department offers teaching and non-teaching majors and a minor in Spanish. Majors will need to take courses abroad in order to complete the departmental requirements; in all cases, the department must approve the study abroad courses in advance.

The Bachelor of Arts degree requires completion of two years of one foreign language. The Bachelor of Science degree must be combined with education or systems analysis.
